I know I can set the User-Agent header manually, but I am looking for a way to programmatically set a header that is required as part of the web page and whose presence must be indicated in a HTTP response. I am looking for something like the solution used by some browser-based application servers. Since I have no control over the content being served I can't set it in the Response.Headers.Add() method since it does not exist. If I am asking for a solution that does not meet the criteria I am interested in, that is fine. If someone has a better way, I would be interested in hearing the details. A: This does not "work", but you could overload the default behavior and add the headers you want: public class CustomWebRequest : HttpRequest { public override void SetRequestHeaders(string name, string value) { base.SetRequestHeader(name, value); } } public class CustomWebResponse : HttpResponse { protected override void WriteHeaders(System.Net.HttpRequest request, System.Net.HttpResponse response, string[] contentTypes) { base.WriteHeaders(request, response, contentTypes); if (request.Headers["User-Agent"] != null) { response.UserAgent =
